1. Background

Violence against women and children is widely recognised as a global problem and one of the most widespread violations of human rights. SDG 5 - Achieving gender equality and empowering all women and girls is one of 17 goals for the United Nations 2030 Agenda and it is integral to all dimensions of inclusive Sustainable Development. Furthermore, SDG 16, which seeks to promote peace, justice and strong institutions for sustainable development, calls for an end to abuse, exploitation, trafficking and all forms of violence against children. Gender equality by 2030 requires urgent action to eliminate the many root causes of discrimination that still curtail women’s and children’s rights in private and public spheres given that this is one of the most pervasive human rights violations in the world today.

Ghana has made progress in its efforts to reduce violence against women and children. This is evident in the enactment of the Domestic Violence Act including its Legislative Instrument, the Trafficking Act, the Children’s Act, the Juvenile justice Act as well as the National Plan of Actions on the Domestic Violence and trafficking. In 2015, Ghana further received Cabinet approval for the Child and Family Welfare Policy and Justice for Children Policy. These policies provide the framework for providing preventive and responsive services to children. Despite these Laws and policies, a lot remains to be done as women and children continue to experience violence, abuse, exploitation and neglect.

The impact of violence has profound consequences for women, children, families and whole communities. The experience, and or exposure, of violence against children also violates the United Nations Convention of the Rights of the Child which requires the protection of children who are exposed to and witness family and domestic violence.
The annual police report documents Statistics from the Domestic Violence and Victim Support Unit (DOVVSU) of the Ghana Police Service indicate rising number of cases against women and children. In 2010, 986 cases of defilement were reported. There was an increase in 2011, where 1,176 cases were reported. The country recorded 10 spousal murders, the majority being husbands killing wives, in 2012. In 2014, out of 17,655 cases reported to the DOVVSU, non-maintenance was high on the list with 6,158 cases.\(^1\) This was followed by 5,212 reported cases of wife battery and assault. There were also 1,667 reported cases of threat, 1,111 cases of defilement and 290 cases of rape. Only reported cases were represented in the data.

In 2016, a research commissioned by the Domestic Violence Secretariat of the Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Protection (MoGCSP) with support of UK Department for International Development (DFID)\(^2\) estimates that 28 per cent of women experienced domestic violence in 2015. Embedded in these reports are numerous intimate partner violence cases of a nonsexual nature; an indication of the extent of the problem. If the lot of women and children are to improve, it will depend on the capacity of the Police to prevent and respond to violations against women and children.

The Ghana Police Service through its specialized unit, the Domestic Violence and Victim Support Unit, has been making good progress in preventing and responding to violence against women and children over the last 20 years. Last year DOVVSU marked 20 years of its establishment. While the unit continues to provide services to women and children, the strategic plan which guides their operation elapsed in 2015. DOVVSU has therefore expressed the urgent need for the development of a new strategic plan that will guide the effective delivery of preventive and responsive services to women and children. The strategic plan is expected to create a single plan for the prevention, early intervention and response to violence against women and their children in Ghana.

The strategic plan is expected to be based on the fundamental premise that violence against women and children is unacceptable. The plan must therefore articulate a commitment to strategic and collaborative action across the continuum of service to: Prevent violence against women and children from ever occurring; Intervene early to identify and support women and children who are at risk of violence; and Respond to violence by holding perpetrators to account, while ensuring that connected services are available for women and children. The strategic plan should be built on the momentum, achievements and leadership that has been demonstrated by DOVVSU over the last 20 years.
